Urban Wildlife Watch Magpie

A cut-out-and-keep guide to urban wildlife

Appearance

- The easily-recognized black-billed magpie is a colourful bird with a black head, chest and tail. Its belly and shoulders are white; patches of white are also visible when in flight.
- The full-grown magpie has a glossy iridescence on its wings and tail. Young magpies have duller colours.

Behaviour

- Magpies are intelligent, resourceful and bold birds. They nest in trees, shrubs, willows and even utility poles. Their nests are sturdy domes made up of sticks and mud and lined with hair and grass.
- Their diet consists of grain, corn, carrion, ground-dwelling invertebrates and small mammals. Magpies will also pick through human garbage.
- Magpies prefer open areas with islands of trees. They also like living along creeks, meadows and near human residences.
- Magpies are all-year residents. During the winter, they tend to colonise with other groups of magpies.
- They lay six to seven eggs, greenish-brown and freckled with brown spots. They hatch within 18 days. Chicks are born bare and helpless.

Management

- Magpies do conflict with humans; however, a number of measures can be taken to minimize this.
- Keep garbage where it cannot be scavenged and pet food where it cannot be eaten by magpies.
- Keep trees and shrubs in your yard well groomed, so magpies will not roost in them. Scarecrows can be used, but magpies become familiar with them unless they are moved around.
- If magpies are already in the area, frightening devices such as bird bangers and alarms can be used. You can also remove the magpie's nest.
- Shooting is a possible control method, but only outside the special control area, urban service area and hamlet policy area.
- Trapping is an option; wire mesh traps can be purchased or built. Bait with pet food for live capture of the birds.

Drive carefully, tread lightly

Share the road with agricultural equipment

- » Spring is on its way - and Spring means large agricultural equipment on our rural roads.
Be cautious and share the road.

Avoid driving on wet fields during the Spring season

- » Driving on wet fields may cause soil degradation and erosion.
- » Rutting can potentially:
 - divert water to unwanted areas
 - disturb vegetative cover
 - compact soil
 - result in uneven yields

Remove soil from equipment after exiting a wet field

- » Remove dirt and mud from your equipment prior to leaving fields to prevent hazardous driving conditions for yourself and other road users.
- » Removing dirt and mud helps prevent the transfer of soil from field to field.
- » Transporting soil between fields increases the risk of transferring weed seeds and plant pathogens such as clubroot.
